SWOON: INTO THE FOREST

Swoon, nom de artiste of Brooklyn-based Caledonia Dance Curry, uses storytelling and the creative process as a method of healing. She became well known as a street artist in New York City through large-scale wheatpastes of characters from her life, a practice which she expanded globally from Thailand to Tunisia to Haiti. Swoon is now included in numerous top museum collections including the Museum of Modern Art in New York, the Brooklyn Museum in New York, and Tate Modern in London.

For the last few years, Curry has been working on her most intimate story and set of characters yet: Sibylant Sisters. This autobiographical installation is immersive and vulnerable, and portrays a magical story set in her childhood through drawing, painting, an oracle deck, and a feature length art film. The artist presents her story so that others can find healing the way she did, over years of "making the subconscious conscious" by exploring her parents' opioid addictions through magical realism. Artwork from Sibylant Sisters is the focus of Turner Carroll Gallery's Into the Forest.

The event that launched Caledonia Curry to fame occurred in 2009, when she sailed unannounced into the Venice Biennale on a series of homemade rafts handbuilt by her and her fellow artists. This project, called "Swimming Cities of Serenissima," was a living community that made the impossible feel possible. It was also, according to art critic Jerry Salz, "The most moving moment [he] had at the Biennale." Salz continued, "Swoon's work doesn't come out of academic critique; it comes from necessity and vision. These are the perfect tools for making things as old as time new again — including an art world turned dangerously into itself."

Curry has since created many other immersive projects with "necessity and vision," including a refurbished church in Braddock, Pennsylvania which trained its community members in professional crafts, and a nail salon which gave manicures to homeless citizens of New York to encourage humanization and joy.

Into the Forest is also the international debut of Swoon's Sibylant Sisters oracle deck. As the artist writes, "The Sibylant Sisters Oracle cards are a work of art you hold in your hands. They are a tool for storytelling and self reflection. Based in the magical world of the Sibylant Sisters fairytale, they offer its symbols and characters as guides for your own mythical journey." Original artworks from the cards are also featured in the exhibition.

Into the Forest will include rare, unique, and highly collectible paintings and drawings which are making their gallery debut directly after being exhibited at the Wyoming Museum of Art.
